

Every recorded epoch is shown without smoothing. Training loss uses sampled augmented slices; validation loss uses each subject's mean of nine slice probabilities.
The two curves use different aggregation units, so their gap is not directly comparable. Checkpoints were selected by four-stage validation NLL, not clinical loss.